

YOUNG HUSBAND REJOINS
HIS EIGHTY-YEAR-OLD WIFE.

New York, Aug. 17.—According to generally accepted report, Mrs. Louise Hutchinson and her youthful husband, Willard H. Hutchinson, an actor, have been reunited after a separation lasting a year. Mrs. Hutchinson is nearly 80 years old and was married to Hutchinson, who is 23, eighteen months ago. She had been married three times before she met him.

In the early part of last summer they had a disagreement which resulted in a separation. The disagreement was due to money matters. Mrs. Hutchinson had signed a deed by which all of her property was to be held in trust for the benefit of her husband. Subsequently she revoked this and signed a new deed of trust, by which each was to share equally in the income of the estate. A short time after that the couple had their disagreement that resulted in the separation.

Then the aged bride began an action to

WHITE WOMAN THE BRIDE OF FULL-BLOOD OSAGE INDIAN.

One of the Antenuptial Provisions Was That the Happy Bridegroom Wear the Clothes of a Paleface—Three Striker Was Lonely and Got His Wife by Advertising.

REPUBLICAN SPECIAL.
Pawhuska, I. T., Aug. 17.—For the first time in the history of the tribe of Osage Indians has a full blood been married to a white woman without a trace of Indian blood in her veins.

Three Striker is a full blood Osage. He is about 50 years of age, and was never married before. He says it was because he was determined to marry a pale face; Indian girls say it was because he was so utterly worthless that no squaw would take him. But a short time ago Three Striker confided to a white trader his desire of possessing a white wife. The trader suggested a matrimonial advertisement in a newspaper, to which Three Striker consented. The advertisement was printed. It stated that an Osage Indian desired to marry a pale face, "with sunny hair and eyes like the sky."

Mrs. Cora Severance was a young widow who had been raised on the Kansas border. Her parents live near Elgin, Kas. She had noted that many white men had become "squaw men," thus securing for themselves a permanent home and an annuity from Uncle Sam, but she never heard of a white woman marrying an Osage, unless it was the mother of a child that she was assured of a home and an annuity for the balance of her natural life.

Answered the Ad.
Being a blonde and having blue eyes, she answered Three Striker's advertisement, and the result was an appointment for them to meet in Pawhuska. Their courtship was carried on through the medium of the obliging trader, who officiated as intermediary.

Mrs. Severance agreed to become Mrs. Three Striker on the conditions that the Indian should lay aside his blanket and

Young Boston Woman Asked for George Moore's "Esther Waters" at Library.

INDIGNANT WHEN REFUSED.

Refuses to Seek the Volume in That Way and Declares She Will Not Submit to Moral Lecturing—The Book.

REPUBLICAN SPECIAL.
Boston, Mass., Aug. 17.—Because she did not have a teacher's card and would not go to the librarian, a young woman, who refused to give her name, was unable to secure a "starred" book from the Boston Public Library, and she has been making a stir about it.

She presented a card at the delivery window with an application for two books, by George Moore, "The Confessions of a Young Man" and "Esther Waters." The young woman acting as delivery clerk noticed that the latter was a "starred" book and ordered the other from the stacks and called the young woman's attention to the fact that, while the "starred" books were not for general circulation, the one desired could be obtained for hall readers, or, if she insisted on having it, she could see the librarian, whose permission was required to obtain it.

Librarian's Explanation.
The applicant replied: "But I thought that teachers could take out the books." The clerk asked if she had a teacher's card, and the woman was obliged to say that she had none. She had been a teacher, but was now married. She did not insist on her demand for the book, though the privilege of seeing the librarian was open to her. She talked to newspaper men, however, and declared she had been scolded for asking for books.

When seen to-night Librarian Whitney said that the library did not intend to let such books go into the hands of young persons not competent to understand them. It was necessary for the library to own copies of many works which were kept in the "inferno" as part of the collection of literature which it is one of the duties of the library to make.

Mr. Whitney thought that the woman who asked for the book must have misunderstood, for the book in question was not a work to be denied to her, and she would have been given courteous treatment. It seemed, as far as he was able to learn, a case of misunderstanding, as he did not think any one in the library would volunteer moral lectures.

Story of the Novel "Esther Waters."
"Esther Waters" is the third story of an untold and untrained, but well-meaning woman of the lower classes from childhood to old age. Brought up by a narrow-minded, rigidly conscientious mother, a member of the best known as the Plymouth Brethren, and a drunken profligate of a stepfather, she is early forced to earn her living by going out to service.

Her first place is at Woodview, the curiously establishment of a trainer of race horses, where, to complete the incongruity, the mistress is a Plymouth Brethren, like Esther herself. At this house she spends several months, the first part of the book being pictorially occupied with her life there. The stable is extremely successful. One of the horses wins at Goodwood, Esther is gradually drawn into the racing and betting excitement, although she never loses her character and her health in taking domestic service. At length one of the servants, William Latch, who has attracted her from the first, leads her astray, under promise of marriage, and her comeliness, in a narrow way, she is made a prostitute, and gradually his home becomes notorious as a resort for gamblers and bad characters. Esther, finding her life a hell, and her health ruined, she is driven to a life of poverty, and gradually his home becomes notorious as a resort for gamblers and bad characters. Esther, finding her life a hell, and her health ruined, she is driven to a life of poverty, and gradually his home becomes notorious as a resort for gamblers and bad characters.

She is now reasonably comfortable for a while, and fairly happy, for he is faithful to her and is the proprietor of a prosperous inn. He is still, however, a gambler, and one day, when she is alone, he takes her by the throat and strangles her. The police come, and she is found dead. The book is a profoundly moral, although it concerns itself with the unromantic and squalid classes thinned by the ordinary novelist.

FOUND SNAKE IN HER BED.
Young Woman's Serious Experience With a Copperhead.
Pawhuska, I. T., Aug. 17.—Josephine Patterson, a young woman living at Fond Bank, was awakened by a snake crawling into her bed on which she was sleeping. She gave a scream of fright. The reptile bit her on the arm, near the shoulder; also on the breast. Her shrieks aroused the other members of the family, who ran in and killed the snake, which was a very big copperhead. The young woman's condition is serious.
